Credit for Prior Learning Inventory

You may be eligible for more academic credit than you have earned in the formal classroom environment. Midway College is eager to work with you to make that determination. Spend a few minutes to record the different kinds of learning you're bringing back to college.

Credit: List the accredited community college, technical college, or four-year institutions that you have attended. Give an approximate number of completed credit hours.

Non-Credit: List any workshops, seminars, or courses you've taken outside of higher education institutions. These may have been offered by your employer, a professional association, or a training company. While you may have earned CEU's (Continuing Education Units) for these courses, this is not a requirement for Midway's CPL program.

Experienced Learning: Think about the things you know a lot about or know how to do well that you've learned primarily outside of a classroom and list at least two of them below. Here are some typical statements of experiential learning:

"I learned a lot about diabetes when my mother was diagnosed."

"I know about teaching from coaching my daughter's softball team."

"I learned a lot about collective bargaining when I was one of the representatives of our union on the contract team."

How about you? Write sentences that start with what you learned and link them to the experience that helped you learn. List at least two examples of experiential learning.
